ON PREMISE, HOSTED, CLOUD … WHAT?

Sometimes it seems like "software people" thrive on making things confusing. They often seem to speak in foreign tongues. Here's a quick lesson in terminology related to where your data is kept:

On Premise: Your software and your data are on your server, in your facility. The software may be "networked" or "web-based", but the data is in your building under your control. You purchase software licenses and can make any changes possible within the constraints of the software program. You are responsible for the purchase, upgrading, and maintenance of your server and the software.

Hosted: Hosted software is on someone else's server. You may or may not be required to purchase full licenses of the software, but you do not have to worry about hardware purchases or maintenance.   You generally are allowed to customize the software. There is a monthly fee involved.

Cloud or Subscription: Cloud or subscription software is similar to hosted, in that you have no hardware to worry about. You are "renting" the software from the software publisher. You generally have less control over customization with subscription software than you do with on premise or hosted versions.
